MANAGEMENT COMMENTARY (QUARTERLY)

The upward trend in equity index performance continues at a rapid pace, driven by a context of good economic news without calling into question the scenario of lower central bank rates for 2024. In the United States, the month's economic publications have shown slowdown (falling retail sales, decelerating ISM indicator of manufacturing and services, declining resignation, slightly higher unemployment, and deteriorating savings rate) but real resilience (industrial production at its highest level since 2022, high wage levels falling little, and a housing sector recovering through a rebound in housing starts and building permits). In Europe, the improvement in economic momentum observed since the beginning of the year is being confirmed. Service activity is returning to expanding territory (1st time since summer 2023), with household morale continuing its slow recovery. China is also reassuring. After falling into deflation, inflation returns. The authorities have announced new measures to further support the housing sector and consumer spending. Industrial production is picking up, and the economy's small and medium-size enterprises (SMIs) in both manufacturing and services are rebounding sharply. Over the month, the only downside is oil, which has risen sharply. The reasons are manifold: renewed geopolitical tensions (Ukrainian drone strikes on Russian refineries, continuing clashes in the Middle East), China's brighter economic outlook, and finally OPEC+'s decision (including Russia) to maintain production cuts. The news flows were therefore positive, allowing the equity indices to increase their increases in March: CAC40 +3.59%, MSCI Europe +3.94%, MSCI USA +3.35%, MSCI EMERGING +2.40%, MSCI JAPAN +2.74% (in €, indices Net Return) and our Moorea GAP Conservative fund to increase by 1.78%. The resilience of the economies leads us to maintain our risk-taking on the US equity markets (outperforming their economies, the dynamics of their artificial intelligence companies) and European ones with favorable valuation differences. We remain constructive in markets for government bonds and high-rated corporate debt (particularly attractive returns). Overall, we maintain a very diversified positioning, which allows us to benefit from the favorable dynamics of equity markets, while offering some protection in the event of a correction.
